

I'm not robot!

死ぬ【し・ぬ】(u-verb) - to die 買う【か・う】(u-verb) - to buy する(exception) - to do 来る【く・る】(exception) - to come がリッジ - porridge 誰【だれ】 - who 皆【みんな】 - everybody 姿【へん】(na-adj) - strange 言う【い・う】(u-verb) - to say 光【ひかり】 - light 速い【はや・い】(i-adj) - fast 超える【こ・える】(ru-verb) - to exceed 不可能【ふ・か・のう】 - impossible 思う【おも・う】(u-verb) - to think この - this (abbr. of これの) 教科書【きょう・か・しょ】 - textbook 多い【おお・い】(i-adj) - numerous 人【ひと】 - person 読む【よ・む】(u-verb) - to read 外国人【がい・こく・じん】 - foreigner 質問【しつ・もん】 - question 答える【こた・える】(ru-verb) - to answer パッケージ - package あらゆる - all 含む【ふく・む】(u-verb) - to include Passive verbs are verbs that are done to the (passive) subject. Unlike English style of writing which discourages the use of the passive form, passive verbs in Japanese are often used in essays and articles. Passive Conjugation Rules All passive verbs become ru-verbs. For ru-verbs: Replace the last 「る」 with 「られる」. For u-verbs: Change the last character as you would for negative verbs but attach 「れる」 instead of 「ない」. Exception Verbs: 「い」 becomes 「い」, 「い」 becomes 「い」. Sample ru-verbs Plain Passive      Sample u-verbs Plain Passive      Exception Verbs Positive Passive Examples がに！ The porridge was eaten by somebody! にだと。 I am told by everybody that (I'm) strange. のをのは。だと。 Exceeding the speed of light is thought to be impossible. はのに。 This textbook is being read by a large number of people. にをが。 I was asked a question by a foreigner but I couldn't answer. には。 Everything is included in this package. Using passive form to show politeness Vocabulary どう - how する(exception) - to do 領収証【りょう・しゅう・しょう】 - receipt 明日【あした】 - tomorrow 会議【かい・ぎ】 - meeting 行く【い・く】(u-verb) - to go While we will go over various types of grammar that express a politeness level above the normal -masu/-desu forms in the next lesson, it is useful to know that using passive form is another more polite way to express an action. In Japanese, a sentence is usually more polite when it is less direct. For example, it is more polite to refer to someone by his or her name and not by the direct pronoun "you". It is also more polite to ask a negative question than a positive one. (For example, 「しますか？」 vs. 「しませんか？」) In a similar sense, using the passive form makes the sentence less direct because the subject does not directly perform the action. This makes it sound more polite. Here is the same sentence in increasing degrees of politeness. ？ - What will you do? (lit: How do?) か？ - Regular polite. か？ - Passive polite. か？ - Honorific (to be covered next lesson) でしょうか？ - Honorific + a lesser degree of certainty. Notice how the same sentence grows longer and longer as you get more and more indirect. Examples はか？ What about your receipt? (lit: How will you do receipt?) のにんですか？ Are you going to tomorrow's meeting? Causative-Passive Forms Vocabulary 食べる【た・べる】(ru-verb) - to eat 行く【い・く】(u-verb) - to go 朝ご飯【あさ・ご・はん】 - breakfast 日本【に・ぽん】 - Japan お酒【お・さけ】 - alcohol 飲む【の・む】(u-verb) - to drink こと - event, matter 多い【おお・い】(i-adj) - numerous あいつ - that guy (derogatory) - 時間【-じ・かん】 - counter for span of hour(s) 待つ【ま・つ】(u-verb) - to wait 親【おや】 - parent 宿題【しゅく・だい】 - homework する(exception) - to do The causative-passive form is simply the combination of causative and passive conjugations to mean that the action of making someone do something was done to that person. This would effectively translate into, "[someone] is made to do [something]". The important thing to remember is the order of conjugation. The verb is first conjugated to the causative and then passive, never the other way around. Causative-Passive Conjugation Form The causative-passive verb is formed by first conjugating to the causative form and then by conjugating the result to the passive form. Examples Examples はのに。 。 Despite not wanting to eat breakfast, I was made to eat it. では。 をが。 In Japan, the event of being made to drink is numerous. にも。 I was made to wait 2 hours by that guy. にを。 I am made to do homework everyday by my parent(s). A Shorter Alternative Vocabulary 行く【い・く】(u-verb) - to go 立つ【た・つ】(u-verb) - to stand 食べる【た・べる】(ru-verb) - to eat 話す【はな・す】(u-verb) - to speak 学生【がく・せい】 - student 廊下【ろう・か】 - hall, corridor 日本【に・ぽん】 - Japan お酒【お・さけ】 - alcohol 飲む【の・む】(u-verb) - to drink こと - event, matter 多い【おお・い】(i-adj) - numerous あいつ - that guy (derogatory) - 時間【-じ・かん】 - counter for span of hour(s) 待つ【ま・つ】(u-verb) - to wait Going along with the shorter causative alternative, you can also use the same conjugation for the causative-passive form. I won't cover it in too much detail because the usefulness of this form is rather limited just like the shorter causative form itself. The idea is to simply used the shortened causative form instead of using the regular causative conjugation. The rest is the same as before. Shortened causative-passive form examples First conjugate to the shortened causative form. Then conjugate to the passive form. Examples This form cannot be used in cases where the shorter causative form ends in 「さす」, in other words, you can't have a 「さされる」 ending. Verbs that cannot be used in this form Examples of verbs you can't use in this form. Examples がに。 The student was made to stand in the hall. では。 をが。 In Japan, the event of being made to drink is numerous. にも。 I was made to wait 2 hours by that guy. Book Navigation
